MMSU's Coastal Cleanup

Mariano Marcos State University (MMSU) actively develops and supports programs to encourage sustainable aquatic stewardship. One key initiative is a series of regular coastal clean-up drives involving faculty, students, and local community members. These clean-ups target waste collection along shorelines, preventing pollutants from reaching aquatic ecosystems and fostering community awareness about environmental protection.

In addition, MMSU integrates environmental education into these programs, equipping participants with knowledge about the importance of marine conservation and sustainable practices. These efforts aim to inspire long-term engagement in protecting aquatic resources and promote a culture of responsibility toward local ecosystems. Through these initiatives, MMSU demonstrates its commitment to maintaining good aquatic stewardship practices and aligns closely with efforts to protect and sustain local marine environments.
